ITALIAN FUR FASHION

This was one of the most varied and content-heavy shows I have seen all season, with eight incredible brands showcasing some breathtaking pieces. Each designer showed a variety of fur that was not simply restricted to coats or gilets, but in actual clothing! This was the very best in raw materials and luxury fashion for real fashion girls! Each show was accompanied by banging house music, making in one of the most refreshing and modern ways to present a show. This was a night to celebrate everything luxurious in Italy and having started with a pre-show reception of the most incredible risotto, gnochhi and other culinary delights, along with an abundnace of prosecco, we were always going to be in the mood for this!

Now I am the first to admit that I am a complex person full of contradictions, hence why I do not judge others for 'sinning differently' as Erykah Badu says so eloquently. Yes, I have a beloved dog and yes of course we are connected to Mother Earth and all its creatures, and yes we must respect trees and the ecosystem we are all a part of. However, despite all of this, there comes another contradiction as I both wear and appreciate fur...but before you judge, I ask you to look at your own life before you are so quick to shame me. Has everything you eat been ethically sourced? Is it 100 percent organic? You are probably reading this on a device which not only is part of a huge conglomerate but also contains cobalt in its rechargeable battery, mined by children under the very worst conditions. Are you 100 percent carbon free and use only renewable energy? Where do you buy your clothes? Your shoes? Your technology? Do you bank with a bank run by the the greedy gloabl elite? You see that when we start peeling back the layers, we all are not completely squeaky clean...we all have a shadow and indulge in things which morally frowned upon. If you are reading this and think you don't, then that's when the alarm bells should be ringing... #WalkingTalkingShadow#... And FY.I faux fur isn't always cruelty free either! I'm not perfect and neither are you 😊
